The Information Contained in This Citizen's Statement Is Priceless.

The hale, the hearty, the strong can afford to toss this paper to one side impatiently when they read the following, but any sufferer in Barre who has suffered hours of torture caused by kidney complaint will stand in his own light if he does not follow the valuable advice offered here.

L. H. Hooker, retired, of 101 Prospect street, Barre, Vt., says: "Doan's Kidney Pills, which I procured at E. A. Brown's, did me more good than all the prescriptions and other remedies I ever used. Over eight years ago I gave a statement for publication telling what they had done for me, and to-day I have even more confidence in them. I had suffered for a long time from kidney complaint, and my condition was finally considered serious. My back ached nearly all the time, and the action of my kidneys was disordered. I at last resorted to Doan's Kidney Pills and received wonderful relief. I use this remedy occasionally now, and have recommended it to dozens of people, many of whom have been so greatly benefited that they have come back and thanked me for telling them of this valuable medicine."

PHILIP FOUND NOT GUILTY.

Clubman Is Acquitted on Charge of Murdering Cadaver.

Washington, June 4.—Gaston P. Philip, civil engineer and clubman of New York and Washington, was acquitted of the murder of Frank Macaboy, a cab driver, by a jury in criminal court No. 2 here Tuesday night. The tragedy was the culmination of a night of revelry preceding the shooting. Macaboy, it is said, claimed that Philip owed him a gambling debt of $150, and importuned Philip to throw dice with him in order to "win the money back," as he put it. Finally the two men went to the Arlington hotel. There Macaboy attacked Philip, it is said, and the latter, fearing serious harm, fired the shot that killed the cabman.

NARROW ESCAPE OF THE PRESIDENT.

Was Thrown From His Horse Into a Rocky Creek.

Washington, June 4.—With the possible exception of the collision between a trolley car and a carriage at Pittsfield, Mass., in which a secret service officer accompanying President Roosevelt was killed, Mr. Roosevelt was never in a more dangerous accident in his life than he was late Tuesday afternoon. While horseback riding in Rock Creek Park his horse was for a moment in great peril, and his escape from either a fatal result or extreme injury is another instance of the "Roosevelt luck" that has become almost proverbial.

The president was thrown from his horse which was a young and spirited animal and landed in the water of the creek at a point where it flows rapidly over small boulders which cover the bed of the stream, and at some points project above the water.

He was accompanied by Mrs. Roosevelt and by Cornelius McDermott, the stalwart artillery sergeant who has attended the president on all his horseback rides around Washington for several years. McDermott had a young horse from Port Myer of the skittish variety, and full of mettle, and nothing would do but the president must try him out. Mr. and Mrs. Roosevelt started out late in the afternoon from Sheridan Circle, where they had alighted from the White House carriage and where the saddle horses, with Sergeant McDermott in charge, was waiting.

EXPLAINS DEATH OF DE CHAULNES.

Shots Declares That Accounts of the Duke's End Were Infamous Libels.

New York, June 4.—On his return from Paris yesterday, Theodore P. Shonts, president of the Interborough Metropolitan company, declared that the report that the death of his son-in-law, the Duke de Chaules, was due to indulgence in opiates were infamous libels. Mr. Shonts said that the duke was not addicted to the use of drugs.

"The memory of the duke has been greatly maligned," said Mr. Shonts. "And outrageous reports were printed about the manner and cause of his death. The facts are these: On the afternoon of the day on which he died the duke and my daughter were out riding. They dined together and then retired to their apartment early. They were kneeling close together and the duke held one arm about his wife's shoulders. Suddenly he lurched forward and then tumbled unconscious at my daughter's feet. He was a big man and she a slight girl, but she lifted him bodily on the bed and screamed for aid. He was dead before anything could be done for him."

The Elton Case.

[Original.]

The orphan Earl of Elton, four years old, was playing in his nursery one morning when Mrs. Rawson, who was in full charge of him, brought in a little girl of about the same years, saying to him:

"Here's a little sister for you, Ralph. Her name is Gladys. Now, don't let me hear any more grumbling about not having playmates like other children."

"Is she my sister?" said Ralph, looking at the girl admiringly. "Why haven't I seen her before?"

"Don't ask questions or I'll send her away."

So Ralph and Gladys proceeded to enjoy each other's company in the amusements of childhood. As they grew older they wondered why they had been separated till their first meeting and had been kept together ever since. Since no one seemed disposed to inform them they spent much time building up hypotheses. Gladys preferring those which accounted for her absence from her brother, she having been stolen by a fairy when she was a baby. But she had very little remembrance of her early life.

They had no playmates except each other. No one interfered with their growing up together in any way their fancies led them. By and by Ralph began to talk about Gladys being his wife, to which she responded that she didn't believe brothers and sisters ever married. And so as they passed through different stages of development there came different kinds of feeling till at last they were nearly grown.

One day when they were fifteen years old they discovered Mrs. Rawson packing Gladys' belongings. When asked what she was going to do, she told them that Gladys was to be taken away. The color vanished from the face of each. Nature had met for them its first conflict with civilization, and nature always makes a desperate fight, especially in the case of the young. These two had been left to mate like the birds. A separation now could not be endured. Something must be done. Several days elapsed before there were any signs of Gladys' immediate removal, which time they spent in talking the matter over. What was there for two children brought up as they had been to do except to flee?

One morning they got together all the money they had—money was never denied them—and counted 25 some shillings and a lot of pennies. Taking this, they went off on such a ramble as they had often taken together before.

They had been kept so aloof from the world that there is a possibility they did not know what marriage meant, especially between brother and sister. Be that as it may, they determined to be married. After much difficulty they found a clergyman, who consented to marry them for all the money they had, and the knot was tied. After the ceremony they strolled aimlessly about till they came to a little park, into which they entered and forgot everything else in the enjoyment of a stream, on the bank of which they sat, throwing stones into the water. They were thus amusing themselves when a policeman went to them and arrested them. Their flight had been discovered and the police notified.

The next morning Sir Michael Frane, a retired barrister, read in a morning paper of the flight of the young Earl of Elton and his sister and their marriage, at which all England was shocked. Sir Michael had been a close friend of the last Earl of Elton. He knew that a minor was heir to the title, but for his life couldn't remember that there was a girl. He finally recalled the fact that a sister of the last earl, the Hon. Mrs. Drewer, had left a little girl and that Mrs. Dwyer and the earl's brother, Tweed Spencer, had been left in charge of the estate and the two children, who were orphans. This Spencer, on assuming this responsibility, had discharged Sir Michael as solicitor for the estate and employed another man. It occurred to Sir Michael that since his old friend's boy was in trouble he would need the services of some one who would be interested in him. He took the train the same day for the town where the children were detained and before they slept had passed some time in hearing their story.

When the trial came up the next morning the children's guardian, Tweed Spencer, was there to claim their return. What was his surprise to see Sir Michael step forward and announce himself as their solicitor. Indeed, Spencer turned white. He was playing a game that would have been very easy had not the children overstepped all supposed bonds by falling in love. As it was, his defeat was certain. He made a clean breast of it and admitted that there was no intention to make the children believe they were brother and sister, but Sir Michael introduced evidence proving that the guardian had intended to marry the girl to his own daughter. The will showed that provision had been made for the union of two properties in the marriage of the cousins, to defeat which Spencer had brought them up as brother and sister.

The young couple were delighted at the result of their escapade. The court decided to appoint a new guardian and yielded to their request in appointing Sir Michael Frane. He persuaded them to live separately till they became of age. The earl went to Oxford, and Gladys was placed under the care of tutors selected by her guardian. When they came into their fortunes they went to the Elton estates to live, celebrating their wedding, which had occurred several years before.

MARY A. BOWEN.

Wage Reduction to Begin July 1. It has been announced from Washington that as a result of conferences between the head of the interstate commerce commission and Commissioners of Labor Charles P. Neill as mediators and the officers and representatives of the employees of the Queen and Crescent, the Southern and the Mobile and Ohio railroad systems the contemplated wage reduction on these roads will not go into effect until July 1. The Louisville and Nashville and the Atlantic Coast Line roads were not parties to the agreement, as they withdrew from the arbitration proposition several weeks ago.

Labor Concentrating Forces. At a recent conference of representatives of the metal working trades held at Cincinnati the proposition of forming the American Federation of Labor similar to the recently formed building trades department was favorably considered. There seems to be a tendency among the trades toward such departments and the consequent concentration of their forces.
